"All health practitioners want to feel they make a difference. My studies have enhanced my ability to do that and they've also changed the way I work and interact with patients. The language I use has changed, as have my data gathering methods, the way I explain things, and my expectations as to what is, and what is not, possible therapeutically. Each paper I've completed has had a very professionally mixed cohort. Some papers have promoted great levels of interaction. It turns out we are all not that different!"
